Beware Cable Owner/Operator . . .

You May Have A New Partner Who Transmits His Signals Free Over Your Cable Plant To Subscribers' Homes and Pays Nothing For The Use Of The CATV System

What has happened is WGN, Chicago is suing United Video (common carrier for WGN) in Chicago U.S. District Court for removing WGN's V.I. (verticle interval) information during their nightly newscast and substituting information generated by United Video.

WGN is suing United Video under a provision of our famous copyright law that prohibits a common carrier (or cable system) from altering or changing the content of programming provided by a copyright holder. When the copyright law was written by Congress, they wanted to make sure that neither a common carrier (or CATV system) could delete advertising and substitute their own local or regional advertising?

How does this affect the cable operator/owner? The next big expansion area for CATV will be to utilize the V.I. portion of each channel carried on the cable system to transmit text/data information to individuals and businesses. A 20 channel cable system can transmit a minimum of 400 pages (16 lines x 32 characters per page) of continuous changing information. This is over 200,000 bytes of information and can be used for numerous revenue producing applications.

Here is what could happen if WGN wins the lawsuit: WGN Chicago is owned by a large newspaper chain (The Chicago Tribune). This large newspaper has a tremendous data bank of information and like many large newspapers, they are beginning to use this information as part of their experimental teletex system (again via WGN).

Now for the scenario of how your new partner rides free on your cable system:

1. WGN wins the suit and United Video does not or cannot afford to appeal.
2. The Chicago Tribune starts transmitting a full data bank of information via WGN on their verticle interval.
3. Common carrier (United Video) and cable system are required to carry this information at no charge to WGN or Chicago Tribune since part is WGN signal.
4. ABC Electronics Company (hypothetical name) of Big Spring, Texas signs up as the local dealer of WGN/Tribune who provides data, teletex and information service, and sends the following direct mail advertisement to all businesses and households in Big Spring, Texas.

   Dear Business or household:

   ABC Electronics has been appointed the local dealer for WGN/Tribune information service which you can receive free over your cable system. In order to use this information service, it is necessary to lease a decoder box from us to view this information on your TV set or to interface with your data terminal.

   A few of the many services provided are:

   1. Full daily and Sunday Chicago Tribune newspaper.
   2. Up-to-the-minute stock, commodity, metals quotations.
   3. Full financial service.

   Stop in for a demonstration to see how helpful these services can be for your home or business application.

What can you do as a cable owner/operator to prevent this free ride utilizing valuable spectrum space on your CATV system?

1. On any satellite delivered service contract, write the following: "We are signing this contract only for visual picture and accompanying sound—nothing else."
2. Alert your trade associations (NCTA & CATV) to this litigation and request that they strongly consider financial support for United Video in this lawsuit.

This is a landmark case and if it is lost we will just have an additional free rider on our cable systems.

NOTE: The article dealing with LPTV programming sources has been delayed until the August 1981 issue. In surveying potential sources, SAT-Guide found that a number of new program suppliers would be making announcements in the next three weeks. Because the software side of LPTV is in its infancy, we felt that delaying the pubication one month would allow us to give our readership a clearer perspective of software sources available.

Penthouse and TeleMine To Co-Venture New Pay-TV Service

The TeleMine Company was founded in 1975 as a stand-alone, pay-per-view service to CATV and cable operators. At that time, in order to make transmitting stand-alone easier, TeleMine developed, and had manufactured, a complete automated system whereby cable operators could program, on computer, at least nine hours of programming without having to change the cassette. This eliminated the need for those just getting started in the cable industry with a manual operation of changing the cassettes on a video recorder. As the industry grew, the TeleMine Company realized that the only way to proceed in the cable industry was to have satellite transmission.

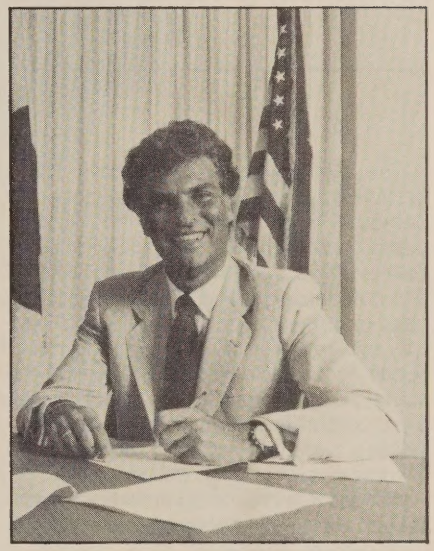
As cable technology expands, the number of channels available will multiply bringing with them the opportunity to differentiate the channels by developing specialized programming formats geared to specific audiences.

Because of the need for an adult market cable television network, Penthouse International and The TeleMine Company, Inc. have developed the concept of a full service adult channel—The Penthouse Entertainment Television (P.E.T.) Network to provide a source of entertainment programming that satisfies this need.

The P.E.T. Network will launch in the fall of 1981 and will be transmitted daily via satellite on Westar I, transponder 3, 12 consecutive hours from 8:00 p.m. (ET) and 5:00 p.m. (PT). TeleMine has recently purchased a full transponder on Westar V and plans to switch to this transponder when Westar V is launched in 1982. P.E.T. plans to expand their programming to 24 hours at that time.

According to Robert Jacobs, President of TeleMine, "The P.E.T. Network is not to be alphabetically categorized an an R channel—it is a channel conceived and created for the Adult America market. It will reflect the attitudes, mores and needs of the over 25 male and female markets of the eighties who want to be challenged as well as entertained by the programming they watch. This is the audience that has found commercial TV wanting. It is to them that our marketing thrust will be directed and this is the foundation from which the Penthouse Network will build."

"The P.E.T. Network is not to be alphabetically categorized as an R channel—it is a channel conceived and created for the Adult America market."



Robert Jacobs, President of TeleMine

The joint cable venture between Penthouse and TeleMine brings to television a compatible blend of talent and expertise from two major modes of communication; network and publication. Penthouse provides the editorial and cross-promotion from its publications as well as an established audience of national readers. P.E.T. will also receive cross-promotion from all the Penthouse publications including Omni, Forum and Penthouse. Penthouse will handle the consumer advertising while

Public Access To CATV Informational Channels

Compuvid's New System Allows CATV Subscribers to Call-up Information

By Bruce W. Robertson, Computer Video Systems

The Compuvid Public Access (CPA) system is a unique and timely response by Computer Video Systems to the cable industry requirements for public access. Teletext type systems are being defined and standards studied to allow public access to large amounts of data and Two-way systems also making some forms of public access a reality today. Many of the same thoughts as Teletext and Two-way are incorporated into the Compuvid Public Access system in a slightly different, and in some cases, greatly reduced form.

Access to a previously entered memory system via the telephone is allowed by the CPA system. Presented on a channel of video, the data is of local interest and periodically updated. The memory, control, and data display system do not require an operator to select and present them.

How It Works
From the Subscribers View

For the subscriber to access the system, he or she simply:

1. selects the access channel on his cable-connected television set.
2. refers to the category code list which cross references two digit code numbers to the corresponding areas of interest.
3. goes to the telephone and dials the number of the system.
4. listens for the beep which acknowledges the phone has been answered.
5. presses the two digits of the category code on the telephone.

The system will respond to this request by showing the two digits of the code requested on the bottom line of the display screen. Having the instant feedback that his request has been accepted, the subscriber is able to watch the channel until his data is presented.

At the bottom line of the display screen there is space for accepting ten requests. As the data for each requested category finishes its presentation, its number moves left off the screen and the next requested category code then moves into the left most position of the bottom line when the header changes to correspond to the requested category; the data for that category is presented in the body of the screen display. As new categories are requested, they appear on the screen in the first open position on the right on the bottom line.

If the bottom line is full, no requests will be accepted until an opening occurs and if a number is requested which already appears in the sequence, it will not be accepted. After a request is accepted, the phone is hung up so that only one request can be entered at one time and the phone is not tied up. Also, if no request has been made within 15 seconds of dialing, the line will automatically be disconnected.

Figures 1, 2, and 3 show a typical sequence which would be seen by the subscriber. Figure 1 shows the system presenting general announcements, ads, etc. before any data has been requested (no entry in the bottom line). Figure 2 shows Senior Citizen information (category code 12) being presented in the body and identified in the header. Categories 14, 45, 02, and 56 have also been requested and will be presented in that sequence. Figure 3 shows entertainment information (category 14) being presented in the body and identified in the header. At this point (Figure 3), if further information were requested, the number would appear to the right of the number 56 in the bottom line.

Part IV

Low Power

Oak Communications' patented, computer-controlled Sigma decoder makes the over-the-air subscription television broadcast signal intelligible. Each decoder is individually addressable from the broadcasting station, allowing the system operator to turn off decoders of subscribers delinquent in paying their monthly fees. A locking key on the side of the decoder provides for parental control over STV viewing.

LPTV Scrambling/Descrambling Equipment

Part IV, A

By Doug Lindquist, Oak Communications

It is typical that a four-part series on LPTV includes security equipment for premium signals in the last issue of the series. The new LPTV applicant too often spends most of his time and money on engineering consulting and legal fees while assuming that programming and scrambling/descrambling equipment will be readily available when an FCC license is received. Failure to thoroughly investigate these costs before filing may lead to a rude financial awakening for the LPTV applicant.

If subscription television is the plan, rather than advertiser supported commercial LPTV, the security equipment should not be just an afterthought, since it represents an integral part of the television operation. Three equally important facets of this business are good programming, a high quality picture, and security of the signal from unauthorized reception. Whether subscription television is viewed by the LPTV operator as necessary for economic survival or as an opportunity for expanded revenue remains to be seen. Nevertheless, the need for "high power" security still remains.

Security

In the jargon of the pay television industry, security equipment consists of encoders and decoders. A premium television signal is encoded or "scrambled" and transmitted in this form to the specially installed antenna at the subscriber's home. A short length of coaxial cable connects the antenna to the STV decoder where the signal is "unscrambled" and converted to a locally unused VHF channel for viewing on the subscriber's television set.

The need for encoding a premium signal is obvious when the subscriber pays for his service through a monthly fee rather than voluntary support of advertising products. There is no reason to believe that the high level of security essential to the success of a full power STV operation should not also be the basis for securing a LPTV premium signal.

Encode/Decode

Currently, the state of the art in subscription television encode/decode systems involves both video and audio encoding and a computer addressable decoder. The most sophisticated system involves a combination of up to ten different time varying processes for video scrambling. The pay audio signal is digitized, embedded in the video, and the entire signal is then encryped in a way similar to that used for military applications. In addition to the sophisticated encoding techniques, the heart of the security system is the individual addressability of subscriber decoders.

The ability to uniquely address each decoder from a computer at the LPTV operator's headend will be the key to successful operation. This capability provides the operator with the following benefits:

1. Discourage "piracy".
2. Reduce past due accounts.
3. Allow program tiering and pay/view features.

The sophisticated encoding and computer addressability will reduce or completely eliminate the potential for theft of service. Even if someone attempts to copy the complicated circuit design or steals the decoder, the inability to crack the encryption code would render the electronics useless.

Addressability helps the LPTV manager control his accounts receivable by allowing an operator to deauthorize the decoder of any subscriber who is past due in his payments. The manager has control of when to turn off a delinquent customer. A method proven quite effective is to deauthorize delinquent subscribers immediately prior to the broadcast of a special event or the premiere of a popular movie.

The unique tiering capability of some STV decoders allows the operator to package premium programming and charge additional fees for specific program categories. For example, a basic movie package from 7:00 p.m. to midnight for $19.95 per month can be supplemented with an "adults only" tier consisting of R-rated movies for an additional charge per month. Addressability and the multiple tier capability of the decoder enables the operator to authorize only the decoders of those subscribers who have paid for the extra service. A parental keylock is available on request to prevent children from viewing adult programming. In addition, occasional very special events can be shown on a pay per view basis to increase operator revenues. This has been

Showtime Moves To 24-Hour Programming

Oskar, played by David Bennent, and Roswitha Raguan, played by Mariella Oliveri, share a quiet moment during World War II in The Tin Drum.

On July 4 Showtime will become the first national pay service to offer movies and original entertainment programs on a continuous, 24-hour basis. As part of its move to a 24-hour schedule, Showtime has unveiled a number of new programs that will feature top talents from film television and the Broadway stage. Showtime also intends to introduce new personalities and segments into its continuity programming, the program material that appears between movies and original shows. The revised schedule will be anchored by specific, recurring time slots that allow viewers to know in advance when favorite shows and new features will appear.

Stars of the planned programs include Mickey Rooney, Orson Welles, Jonathan Winters and Gallagher. Melba Moore and Robert Guillaume will star in the Tony Award-winning musical, Purlie, to be presented on "Broadway On Showtime™". Mr. Rooney, currently starring in the hit Broadway burlesque musical, Sugar Babies, will headline six one-hour specials of classic burlesque and vaudeville material. According to Showtime President Mike Weinblatt, the specials will accent "the outrageous sight gags, rapid-fire dialogue and great sketches that made burlesque and vaudeville American institutions."

Complementing the Mickey Rooney specials will be 24 new editions of Showtime's successful comedy series, Bizarre, as well as two new half-hour comedy series scheduled for alternate Tuesday evenings, The Wacky World of Jonathan Winters and Laff-A-Thon. Originally produced for a limited station run in the 1972-1973 and 1973-1974 seasons, The Wacky World of Jonathan Winters will come to Showtime in a re-edited version that will include Mr. Winter's zany improvisational sketches and brilliant monologues as well as program introductions by Orson Welles and special appearances by Burt Reynolds, Bill Cosby, Glenn Ford, Howard Cosell and Ricardo Montalbon.

Applications In CATV and

We've heard about the day when we'll be able to bank at home, study at home, shop at home, or read our newspapers at home using the TV set. Using the various videodata and teletext technologies, these things will very likely come to pass, someday in the future, that is. While these things are in the future, though, there are several applications of this technology that are feasible and available today from one company, Southern Satellite Systems Inc. (SSS). More about that later.

Teletext technology is not new to the world by any means. Great Britain has been broadcasting teletext for more than five years, and is generally considered to be a bit ahead of the rest of the world. France has been doing it for awhile, and Canada, too, has a teletext system. Whether it has been transmitted via broadcast methods or standard phone lines, the technology has been around for at least a few years.

The trade names of the various teletext systems are a collection of acronyms like CEEFAX, ORACLE, ANTIOPE, and SOFRATEV. Then there are the other names, like CableText, Telidon, and Prestel. CEEFAX is the British version of teletext. Its name came from "see facts" or BBC-facts, but the meaning was clear. Another British system is called ORACLE, which stands for Optional Reception of Announcements by Coded Line Electronics. The basic French version is ANTIOPE, and Canada calls its system Telidon. Prestel is a two-way system in Britain, and CableText is the trade name for the teletext service from SSS, which is the first teletext system to be delivered via satellite and then through cable systems.

Delivery

Teletext technologies have some differences, but basically employ many of the same means. The data or information is carried on the vertical interval of a television signal. Within the vertical interval are 20 lines, many of which are used for the sync and color control information that keeps a TV picture looking good. But on a few of the lines of the vertical interval, data and information can be transmitted. Using CableText from SSS as an example, lines 15 and 16 of the vertical interval are used to carry CableText. Within each line, a certain amount of information can be carried, but overall, the CableText system can identify 800 "channels" (sometimes called pages) for data and information transmission. Again using CableText as an example, the information is embedded in the vertical interval of a satellite television signal, in this case, that of the signal carrying SuperStation WTBS. The signal is received and decoded using a special decoder that translates the information and displays it in a basic video form. Most teletext systems are basically one-way, with only a few exceptions. And with most systems, the basic video form is the only option available to users. However, CableText can send either a signal that is similar to an RS-232 format to drive printers or stand alone character generators, or it can deliver a signal that drives a character generator built right into the decoder.

With all this technology available, it might seem that the only thing left to do is for the cable operator to devote a few channels to the various types of information that can be carried via teletext. But that's where the catch comes in, with, as usual, the cost. While general services such as news will undoubtedly be of interest to the vast majority of cable subscribers, other types of information won't appeal to the masses. So, the ordinary TV subscriber would have to purchase their own decoders, and the prices won't be in that range for several years. Does that mean that for now, teletext can only deliver mass-oriented items to cable system headends? No!

Specialty User

SSS sees the big "today" market for their CableText service as the "specialty user". That means not only the specialty subscriber to cable (like professionals, businesses, etc.), but the specialty supplier of information. Right now, CableText is delivering UPI and Reuters newswires, and will soon start delivering "Consumer News" from Vector Enterprises. But this is only a small part of the market that CableText has set out to serve. Specialty users such as doctors, lawyers, or executives from all kinds of businesses can use the teletext technology now, with CableText.

A doctor may take advantage of this system by subscribing to a medical channel. If he's only interested in information about new medications, he can have his decoder specially prepared to be addressable, which we'll describe in more detail later. The largest hospital in each city may have a decoder that utilizes the RS-232 printing feature of CableText, and distribute that printout of current information to participating physicians. A lawyer could get information he needs today, soon after it happens, instead of waiting for the trade journal that applies to his profession to come out next week. A businessman specializing in manufacturing might subscribe to a special business information channel that delivers to groups of selective users all on the same channel. Using the various special features of CableText, this technology becomes even more convenient.

Mass Appeal

An example of a mass appeal application of the CableText technology might include airline schedules. Schedules for all the major airlines may soon be in subscriber homes all over the country. The CableText feature that will be of primary use in this application is called "addressability". Obviously, a cable subscriber in New York wanting to fly to Atlanta has no interest in flights that go from Los Angeles to Seattle. But with CableText, the subscriber won't have to watch for hours to find out the schedule of Cable television's highest honor—the ACE Award—was presented to 34 winners at an entertainment gala climaxing the National Cable Television Association's 30th annual convention.

Awards For Cablecasting Excellence—1981 Winners

The Awards for Cablecasting Excellence (ACE), chosen by a five-member panel from outside the cable industry, recognize highest achievement in five categories of original made-for-cable programming at the community and national levels.

Presenting the awards were Douglas H. Dittrick, outgoing chairman of NCTA, and Steve Allen, master of ceremonies at the gala which included entertainment by award-winning singing star Barbara Mandrell.

In addition to the ACE Awards, one Distinguished Achievement and two Special Recognition Awards were presented. The awards are made by the Cable Services Committee to companies, groups or individuals who deserve national recognition for achievement not covered by other categories. NCTA also announced its eight "National" awards which are presented annually for significant contributions to development of the cable industry.

Among the guests at the ceremony were hundreds of persons—including many of the nation's top experts in communications—who spent the last three days attending panels and viewing exhibits featuring electronic equipment and the latest cable TV programming at NCTA's largest-ever convention.

Dr. Vivian Horner, chairperson of the Cable Services Committee, said, "The winning programs are fine examples of the type of made-for-cable programming available to subscribers. From my experience as chair of the committee for two years, the improvements made are astounding. The panel of final judges had a most difficult task in making their decisions."

Out of the original 550 entries screened by the Cable Services Committee, 95 basic cable and nationally distributed cable programs were nominated for final judging. The five-member panel of judges included Red Burns of the Alternate Media Center, New York University; Andrew Ferguson, an independent producer; Perrin Ireland, program specialist for the National Endowment for the Arts; John Naisbitt, editor, Trend Report; Tom Shales, TV editor, The Washington Post.

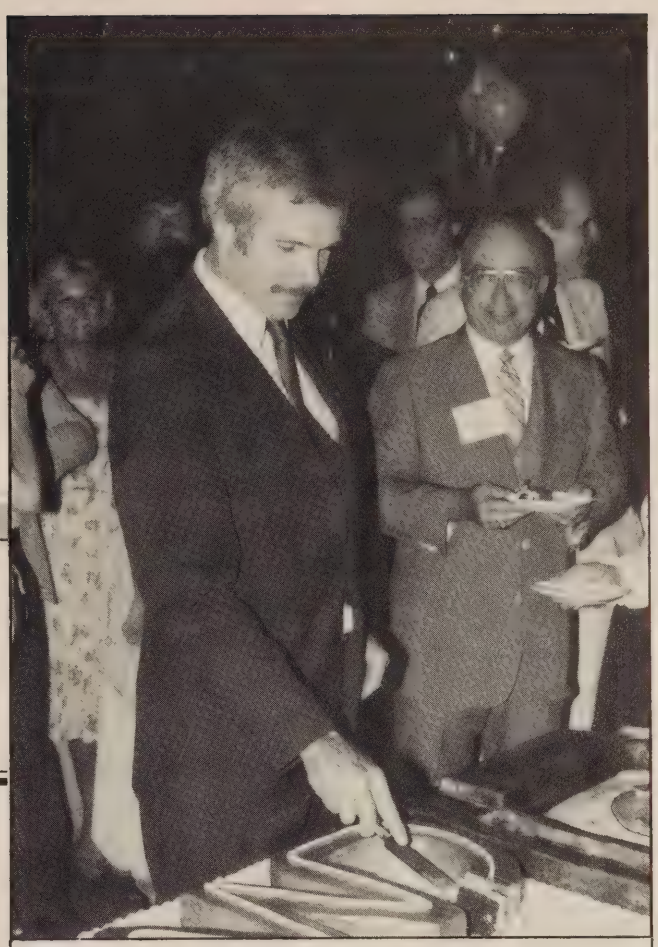
CABLE NEWS NETWORK

CNN Celebrates First Anniversary



Ted Turner proves CNN can cut it.

Cable News Network celebrated its first anniversary Monday, June 1. Since its premier, CNN has aired 24-hour-a-day news non-stop. During its first year, CNN has covered virtually every type of major story known to a news-gathering organization; from a Presidential election, to natural disasters, to international crisis, to fast-breaking spot news, to the shooting of Pope John Paul II and President Reagan. "Just about every major national and international story that has broken since last summer," quotes the Buffalo Evening News, "was covered first—and often best—by CNN through its satellite facilities."

To express gratitude to the cable companies and advertisers who backed and supported CNN from its infancy, CNN hosted a first birthday party during the annual NCTA convention in Los Angeles. The gala event at the Bonaventure Hotel was attended by the cable industry's top personalities, as well as Hollywood celebrities such as Lorne Greene, Barbi Benton, Robert Goulet, Buddy Ebsen, Barbara Eden, Dionne Warwick, Ernest Borgnine, Levar Burton, Jeff Conaway, Bart Braverman and Richard Sanders.

Commenting on CNN's first year, CNN President Reese Schonfeld says, "CNN is exactly where it is supposed to be at this point. It's one of the great success stories of journalism as a business."

CNN Reporter Awarded Cable TV's Highest Honor

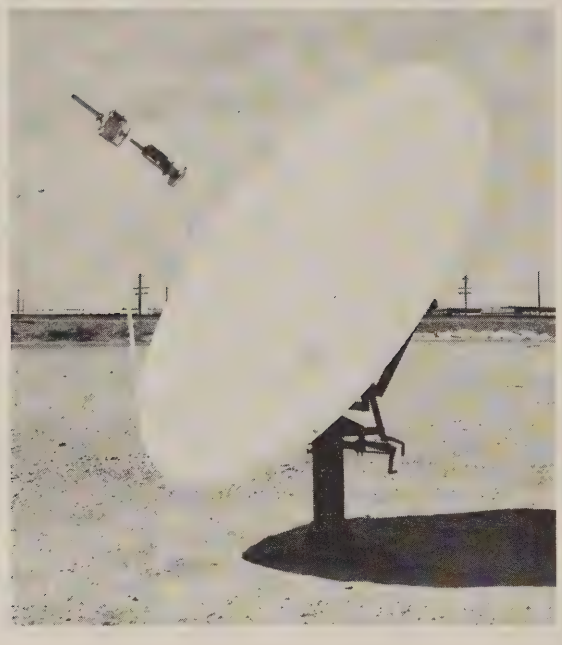
Jean Carper, Cable News Network's Washington, D.C. Medical Reporter, has been presented with cable television's highest honor, the NCTA Award for Cablecasting Excellence (ACE). Carper was cited for her four-part documentary, "Investigative Report on Cancer."

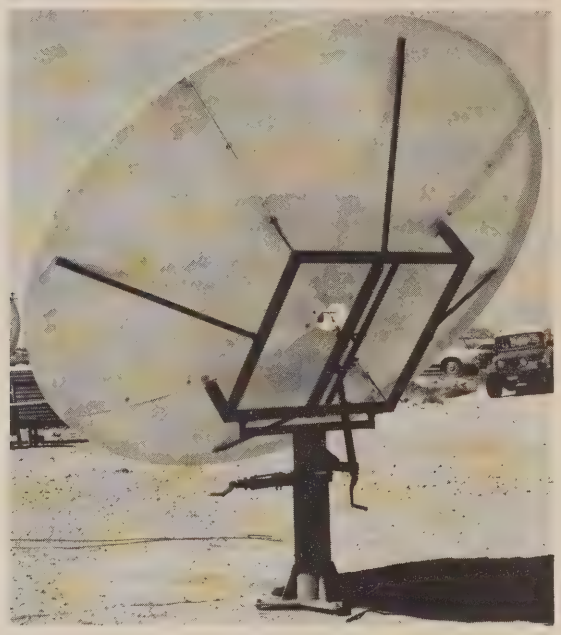
The ACE awards were established three years ago to recognize top performance for original, made-for-cable programming at community and national levels. Over 550 entries were reviewed by an NCTA committee before selection of 95 finalists. The winning programs were then chosen by a five-member panel from outside the cable industry. Dr. Vivian Horner, chairperson of the NCTA selection committee, says, "The winning programs are fine examples of the type of made-for-cable programming available to subscribers. The panel of final judges had a most difficult task in making their decisions."

Jean Carper has been a medical reporter with CNN since its inception one year ago. She is a veteran Washington, D.C. television and print reporter specializing in national medical and consumer issues. In addition to ten books on consumer, medical and food subjects, Carper has written articles for such publications as The Washington Post "Outlook", Newsweek, Consumer Reports, Changing Times, and Saturday Review. Based in CNN's Washington, D.C. bureau, Carper covers the National Institute of Health, and consumer issues taken up in Congress, such as the withholding of pension benefits. Her most recent documentary, entitled "New Hope for Low IQs", concerns the possibility of biochemically altering mental retardation.

On presentation of the ACE for her series on brain cancer, Carper commented, "I am especially pleased to be given this award for a subject of such enormous concern—the pollution of the environment and ourselves by dangerous chemicals. I hope the reports helped make people more conscious of the potential human destruction from chemicals and the need to control them. I'm grateful to the scientists and workers who helped with my investigation, and to CNN, which has made a commitment to this kind of journalism."

Reach For The Stars with WILSON





Wilson Microwave Systems uses the latest state of the art method of manufacturing the parabolic designed antenna. Resistance to distortation and instability is increased with the addition of a full screen mesh sealed within the ¼" thick fiberglass.

The 4pc construction of the dish provides easier handling, less installation time, and greatly reduced shipping costs.

For those areas that require a larger dish than the 3.35 meter, Wilson offers an addition that will increase the size to 4.0 meter. It is easily bolted to the outer edge and maintains the strength, while increasing the performance.

The Wilson antenna package includes antenna, Vari-Mount, manual satellite locators, LNA/Rotor mount, rotor, 100' of 4/C rotor cable, and a rectangular feed horn.

Wilsons unique "Vari-Mount" provides the easiest installation and mounting method available today. Simply dig 4 holes with either a post-hole digger or an auger, 4 feet deep. Form a base with 2 x 4's for a finished look, then insert the four furnished bolts. Fill with 12-14 bags of Redi-Mix and it is finished.

With the exclusive 4 point Williams' mount, you are assured a quicker installation and that the antenna will be more securely fastened to the Vari-Mount. The antenna struts aid in stabilizing the fiberglass for operational reception in winds of up to 50-60 MPH.

A ball bearing race allows easy turning of the antenna in changing to the different satellites. A scale is included on the base to assist in their location.

The Vari-Mount comes standard with manual satellite locaters in the form of gear driven hand cranks. Easily turned, they offer the most economically accurate method of rapidly moving to a different satellite.

The optional remote control feature allows you to control the movement of the azimuth and elevation positions of the antenna from the comfort of your easy chair – without having to go outside. This feature may be added at a later date, even after the manual system has been installed and in use.

The new Wilson Scalar Feed Horn offers an additional improvement to signal reception (.5 to 1.5DB) that will be immediately visible. Available as an option to both 3.35 and 4.0 meter antennas.

flights departing from his area. The CableText decoder at his cable system's headend will only display the information that is addressed to that system. All the other information transmitted that doesn't apply is "transparent" and won't be displayed at all there. When the decoder receives the addressed information for that area, it will then be placed on a special channel that subscribers receive in their home. This same feature will be used by the specialty users, like the businessman we mentioned earlier. He'll have an addressable decoder tuned to the business channel, but he'll only see the information that applied to his particular kind of business.

Storage

The feature of addressability goes hand in hand with another CableText feature called storage. Using the feature of storage, a person receiving any type of information wouldn't need to sit in front of a monitor all day waiting to receive any given information. The unit will store the matter, and when it's called for, it will display the appropriate information.

Unique Features

The final CableText feature available uses a special RS-232 attachment which enables a decoder to be attached to a printer or character generator. This allows a subscriber, whether it's in a business, office, or at a cable headend, to have the information he needs printed, as opposed to the basic video format in which most teletext services are displayed. The RS-232 mode feature of CableText also offers the reality of "electronic mail". If, for example, a large MSO wants to send a large number of memos to its branches quickly, it won't have to send each individually via mail or phone line by facsimile. It can send the information first to a central location, namely the SSS uplink in Douglasville, Georgia, and then from that point, the letter can be sent simultaneously to all the receiving locations. A large company with branch offices all over the country could also use this system, with the messages delivered via special courier to the business branch, or picked up at the cable headend. If the MSO headquarters or business headquarters doesn't want all its branches to receive the letter or memo, the feature of addressability can be used to send it to only the branches that need to receive it.

Reporting Credit Card Thefts

Another application of the CableText technology planned by SSS includes reporting of credit card thefts. A major credit card would have a large bank in each town or city as their City Reporting Agency. Banks with automatic tellers would be tied into this large bank. This means a credit card holder could report theft of a card 24 hours a day. The City Reporting Agency in each city would report to the credit card's central office on a daily basis or immediately, and the credit card's central office would be connected via satellite or phone loop to the CableText uplink in Georgia. The information would then be transmitted via CableText to the entire network of the credit card, in other words, to each City Reporting Agency all over the country. This makes the report of a card stolen in one city available all over the country within minutes. That may mean the card could be recovered, and if it was stolen, it may also mean the apprehension of the thief. Using data terminals in retail stores, a clerk would enter a credit card number during a sales transaction and immediately get feedback on the status of the card.

The Attractive Alternative

Working closely with Zenith, who manufactures the CableText decoders, SSS went on satellite with the service in the summer of 1980. Today, the service is the only satellite delivered teletext service available commercially in the United States. The wide range of the satellite distribution, with over 3,000 dishes pointed at Satcom I and receiving the WTBS signal, makes CableText an attractive alternative to the traditional data distribution methods, and will involve the cable and satellite industry in this business in an integral way for the first time.

quite successful in the full power STV business for broadcasting selected boxing matches such as the two Leonard-Duran fights.

The STV security system also allows the station operator to broadcast an unscrambled audio "barker channel" which can carry advertising messages to those nonsubscribers who tune their televisions to the scrambled channel but are unable to view the premium service. A continual promotional announcement is an efficient way to generate inquiries and orders for the premium service.

The scrambled signal from the LPTV station can also be carried over MATV systems in apartments and hotels as well as local CATV systems. Various decoding techniques are available for bulk billing or individual subscriber authorization in these systems.

The encoding equipment for low power subscription television will work with either a satellite feed or taped programming and any size transmitter, whether it be 10 watt or 1 kilowatt. Until now, subscription television has been carried over a UHF frequency and down converter within the decoder to an unused VHF output channel. However, the same sophisticated system is also available for VHF frequencies. A simplified block diagram of an STV system in shown on page M13.

Costs

While there is no doubt that sophisticated encoding equipment is essential to subscription television operation, there is certainly a big question of how much the LPTV operator can afford for this equipment.

Headend encoding and control equipment costs can vary between $50,000 and $500,000. This cost includes encoders, subcarrier generator, linearity corrector, controller, processor amp, video distribution amp, down converter, data oscilloscope, spectrum analyser, demodulator and many other pieces of equipment essential for effective encoding of a television signal. Backup equipment is recommended for all critical areas of broadcast operation. Obviously, this capital investment will vary based on level of sophistication, redundancy, test equipment, and computer control.

Although not recommended, the beginning LPTV operation could handle billing and decoder control manually rather than going on line with the computer system. Assuming a low daily install rate in a LPTV operation, the nonvolatile memory of the decoder would require addressing only those new installations and deauthorizations each day rather than running a global address of all subscribers as some full power STV operations do.

As program suppliers for the pay TV industry recognize the need to prevent unauthorized direct reception of satellite programming, they will begin to install encryption systems at their up-link facilities. Thus, a satellite fed LPTV pay operation may also require a decrypter similar to the ORION system manufactured by Oak Communications. The expense to the pay television operator for this system is minimal.

A major cost factor for pay operation of LPTV will of course be the addressable subscriber decoder. A budgetary estimate of $140-160 would be appropriate. In its proposed rule making for LPTV, the FCC indicated it might allow the sale rather than lease of decoders to subscribers. Although this would reduce the initial investment required of the STV operator, it is inconsistent with previous FCC rules prohibiting the sale of decoders. Obviously, the sale of decoders could only be accomplished if an addressable system was utilized.

Too often the novice LPTV applicant assumes that the lower cost of transmitting equipment for low power will result in a corresponding reduction in costs of encoding equipment. This is just not the case. The sophisticated addressable encoding equipment is basically the same whether the station operates at 10 watts or 110 kilowatts. The features of video scrambling, audio encryption, and computer addressability that are so essential to success in full power STV operations should also be included in the LPTV system. However, the economics of the business venture ultimately rule what equipment is affordable.

When the FCC finally gets the ball rolling for LPTV, equipment manufacturers may offer less expensive options for encoding and decoding equipment. An inexpensive encoding system is already in use in CATV and MDS systems throughout the country. This system is currently designed for VHF operation, involves video scrambling only (i.e., pay audio enters every home unscrambled) and does not include computer addressability. There is certainly a price vs. quality tradeoff here, coupled with the ease of theft of the decoder for illegal reception of the premium programming. However, if LPTV operators demand a UHF version of this system and the market justifies it, the equipment supplier will undoubtedly respond to the need. On the other hand, an even more expensive multiple channel version of the current STV decoder may prove more economical in the long run if several LPTV franchises are granted in the same city. In this way, one decoder could be put into each home and the cost shared by several STV or LPTV stations offering different programming in the same market area.

Expanding The Marketplace

The fast pace of the communications industry requires equipment suppliers to expand R&D activities to stay on the leading edge of technology. In terms of encode/decode systems, LPTV may accomplish in subscription television what HBO did in cable television six years ago. The ability of small cable operators to economically justify pay TV operations led to a greatly expanded market for decoders. LPTV may offer even greater potential for expansion of the decoder market and the major equipment suppliers stand ready to respond to the challenge.

SHOWTIME

Laff-A-Thon will introduce a new comedy game show. The uncensored series will showcase different comedian hosts and four comic contestants, who will be judged by a panel selected from each show's studio audience. Each "player" will be competing on behalf of a home contestant selected randomly before the round starts. Among the comics participating in the series will be performers from Showtime's popular Big Laff Off series.

Jonathan Winters

The Big Laff Off is a series of specials spotlighting rising comedy stars in cities like San Francisco, Houston, New York, Los Angeles, Fort Lauderdale and Chicago. After the move to 24 hours, Big Laff Off will be expanded to a bi-monthly schedule as it continues to travel around the country, providing a showcase for every kind of American humor and an opportunity for new comic talent to receive national exposure.

In emphasizing Showtime's interest in comedy, Mr. Weinblatt announced that the comedian Gallagher has signed a multi-year contract with Showtime to do several new comedy specials. Gallagher's Showtime special last February, Gallagher: An Uncensored Evening, was a "tremendous success," said Mr. Weinblatt, adding, "We are proud to continue our relationship with this unique rapidly-rising comedy star."

The expansion to 24-hour programming will also involve major innovations in continuity programming. "As a total entertainment service, we have a responsibility to provide quality entertainment every minute of every hour," said Mr. Weinblatt. "We are attempting, in our new format, to build a distinct, new face for the Showtime service."

Showtime's new continuity plans include the introduction of a host and hostess, who will guide viewers through the schedule each day. Renny Temple, known to television audiences through appearances in Soap, All In The Family and The Life and Times of Eddie Roberts, will join his actress wife, Caren Kaye, who has made guest appearances on The Mary Tyler Moore Show and stars with Richard Pryor in the current film, Some Kind Of Hero. The pair will offer unusual insights and amusing anecdotes on Showtime's upcoming programs.

Also appearing between Showtime attractions will be a new series of short interviews hosted by actress Meredith MacRae, who will conduct informal conversations in the homes of top talents appearing on Showtime; humorous segments featuring a guest "comic of the month"; Aerobicise, where instructors will demonstrate the beauty and grace of physical movement in 2-5 minute segments; and two programs on the Hollywood scene hosted by journalist Bill Harris. On Inside Hollywood, Mr. Harris will cover the latest developments in show business and report the inside gossip from the entertainment capital. On Hollywood Top Ten, he will spotlight the top grossing films of the month through clips and commentarty in an effort to keep subscribers up to date on the current film scene.

Another planned change is the scheduling of many programs and movies in specific, recurring time slots. In addition to the comedy evenings on Tuesdays, Showtime will reserve specific daytime slots for daily presentations of MGM film classics. Also, nightly features will commence at 8:00 p.m. (ET) and afternoons will be devoted to outstanding family entertainment, with Carousel ™ children's presentations scheduled each weekday at 3:30 p.m. (ET). Adult-oriented romance and adventure features will remain in the late evenings and late night hours.

Showtime, a joint venture of Viacom International Inc. and Teleprompter Corporation has approximately two million subscribers in over 1,100 cable systems throughout the United States. The service is offered 24 hours on weekends and 12 hours on weekdays. As of July 4, 1981, Showtime will be offered 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

WTBS, SuperStation Announces Innovation in Programming. Starting June 29, 1981, SuperStation WTBS programming will be scheduled to begin five minutes past the hour and at five minutes past the half hour. All of the SuperStation's round-the-clock programming will conform to this change. WTBS Executive Vice President, Robert Wussler says, "since all stations program in this format, millions of viewers have to suffer through commercial clutter on all channels at the same time." He continues to say, "Our trademark has been and continues to be innovation, and we're going to give viewers a chance to see something other than ads on those half hour breaks. We're going to run programs when all other stations are running commercials. When dials are being flipped, we're going to provide an alternative for viewers. Once we have these viewers, we're going to keep them."

ESPN

ESPN Prime-Time Hot Line Heats Up. ESPN's "Prime-Time Hot Line", a toll-free 800 number that was inaugurated during the last week of April, has been an overwhelming success for the Total Sports Network, but a bit of a headache for the telephone company.

Established as a means to update viewers on the ESPN program schedule for that evening, the network had hoped for 25,000 calls per month when the system was initiated. Viewers in any state (except Alaska and Hawaii) can call 1-800-243-0000 and hear one of ESPN's SportsCenter staff announcers preview the night's prime-time programming in a sixty-second recording.

After the first ten days of the program, however, ESPN was receiving calls at a rate of 100,000 per month—over a million a year—and the load on the phone company switchers and relay systems was too great. One blew out, affecting all of Connecticut, and required the assistance of engineers from the Bell Laboratories in New Jersey and two days to resolve.

Premiere To Dissolve. Premiere the joint venture formed in April 1980 by Columbia Pictures Industries Inc., Getty Oil Company, MCA, Inc., Paramount Pictures Corporation and Twentieth Century Fox Telecommunications, Inc. to develop a satellite-fed motion picture network for cable television systems and over-the-air pay television companies, will dissolve immediately pursuant to a decision reached by its board of directors. Premier's debut, scheduled for January 2, 1981, was prevented by a preliminary injunction issued by the courts in connection with a suit filed by the United States Department of Justice. In dissolving the company, Premiere plans immediately to sell its satellite transponder 21 on Satcom I, along with its program uplink facilities and other company assets.

National Microtech's Apollo X-9 Antenna.

National Microtech Introduces Apollo X-9. National Microtech introduced its revolutionary new satellite antenna, Apollo X-9 at the International Consumer Electronics Show in Chicago. Microtech's Apollo X-9 antenna uses single piece fiberglass construction in the shape of an octagon to maximize performance while reducing the size of the antenna. The Apollo tracks the whole band of satellites easily from anywhere in the United States, and can be equipped with the Apollo X-1 remote antenna director. The Apollo X-3 remote will access any satellite automatically by a touch of a button. For further information contact: (800) 647-6144 or circle Action Card No. 37.

LNR Communications, Inc. Introduces Model C/T-70 Test Set, for testing transmission quality in message, digital and video transmit/receive loops. By injection of controlled levels of calibrated 70 MHz noise, the C/T-70 makes possible accurate measurement of FM/FDM message receiver quieting curves, Bit Error Rate vs. EB/NO measurement of digital service, or continuous-random-noise vs. C/T measurements for video links. Kilovac Corporation Introduces Special High Isolation Coaxial Relay. The Dow-Key Division of Kilovac Corporation has just released for sale a new High Isolation SPDT Coaxial Relay. The model 66-237232 was developed primarily for use with cable television head-end equipment, and features 75 ohm "F" female connectors which provide a minimum of -100 dB isolation DC to 500 MHz. The relay comes equipped with a 26.5 vdc actuating coil and DPDT auxiliary contacts. Power capacity is 20 watts CW. The relay is designed for video source switching, using the auxiliary contacts for audio follow-on. It has excellent RF characteristics for IF switching, and the auxiliary contacts may be used for remote indication of the relay position. The same relay is ideal for RF switching to 500 MHz, and for use in remotely actuated or programmable switching modules. Stereo Transmission Processor Developed For MTV: Music Television. On August 1, 1981 at 12:01 a.m. (ET), Warner Amex Satellite Entertainment Company launches MTV: Music Television. WASEC has developed an optimized transmission technique to provide superior audio, which complements the channel's stereo format and meets the needs of cable operators. For reception and delivery of the stereo sound, a cable system need only add a Stereo Transmission Processor. The Processor consists of two components which receive the signal from the satellite and launches it into the cable on the available FM frequency of the affiliate's choice. Two manufacturers are currently producing stereo processors which meet or exceed WASEC's goals for the affiliate of low cost, high quality and readily available hardware. The companies are: Leaming Industries, 180 McCormick Avenue, Costa Mesa, Ca. 92626; and, Wegener Communications, Inc., 150 Technology Park, Suite 1, Norcross, Ga. 20092.

Indra Satellite Communications Begins Design and Manufacture of Receiver Components. Indra Satellite Communications, Inc., a recently formed Arizona corporation, has begun the design and manufacture of modular components to be used in satellite earth receiving stations. Bob Guccione, Owner of Penthouse International, Ltd.

TeleMine will provide the programming, production capabilities and the satellite.

Bob Guccione, owner of Penthouse International, stated, "The Penthouse Television Network is a dramatic breakthrough in the field of cable. It is our aim to provide programming with true creative freedom, unencumbered by repressive commercial censorship and restrictions. This in turn will fundamentally change the viewing habits of sophisticated audiences throughout the country.

We will offer exclusive programming that will stimulate as well as entertain adults; the kind of programming that the networks and other cable giants have been unwilling or unable to present.

We will feature discussion shows that openly deal with lifestyles and relationships emceed by experts in the field. We will shock with investigative journalism on topical subjects. Our camera will reveal candid glimpses of the men and women who set the international pace in their respective fields. The films selected for the P.E.T. Network introduce into the area of comedy and variety irreverent performances and performers that won't be available to any other pay service. This is exciting and provocative programming that will add depth to cable and make our service unique."

The Penthouse Entertainment Television Network plans to carry open forum discussion shows with the Penthouse "Pet's" to show that the Pet's are more than just beautiful girls—they are intelligent, and have talents other than just being pretty and photogenic.

Since cable TV is the fair-haired communications medium of the moment, specialized channels are the current rage. With the foundation services firmly entrenched, the trend is now leaning heavily towards adult programming formats. The labels applied to these new services range from "R", to sexy, to erotic, to boldy different.

It is the feeling of P.E.T. Network that the adult market is not interested in buying additional programming by label. Programming will be sold by quality and differentiation. Quality product, served in a quality package that adds the missing appetizers and desserts to the overall cable menu offered, is what will sell the subscriber.

The P.E.T. Network has the benefit of a publication firm that has proven success in satisfying the adult market editorially. Now, through research and evaluation, the most stimulating features will be translated to video. From Forum will come free-wheeling discussion shows that honestly deal with current lifestyles and relationships. From Penthouse profiles will emanate strong reportorial interviews and investigative journalism on topical subjects.

In original programming, P.E.T. Network will offer viewers a diversified alternative to regular network programming; the familiarity of a series without the encumbrances of commercial censorship and restrictions.

An adult channel can be totally upscale, exciting and provocative without focussing on nudity.

Epilog

Billed as "action, adventure and sex", the R-rated programming services are enjoying a current surge of popularity. Notwithstanding the moral outcries by concerned citizens—or because of it—the existing R-rated services are experiencing a tremendous growth curve and new sexy services continue to come out of the woodwork.

This month, SAT-Guide has taken a look at the newest entry into the "Adult America market", P.E.T., the co-venture of TeleMine and Penthouse International.

TeleMine has been supplying the television industry with R-rated programming via tape and this service, called "Impact Theater", was to be launched on satellite this month. Since signing an agreement with Penthouse International, TeleMine's scheduled July launch has been postponed until September and the service will be known as "P.E.T." rather than "Impact Theater".

Next month, Escapade will be introduced to SAT-Guide readers.

When Escapade made its premiere in December, it shared a transponder with its sister service, Bravo, and National Christian Network, on whose transponder Rainbow Programming was able to lease time. Since then, the success of both Escapade and Bravo has prompted Rainbow to acquire a second transponder and offer both services as full-time, seven-day separate entities. Bravo has been moved to transponder 3-H, while Escapade remains on transponder 4-V, and both will begin their full-time service this month.

Sex or S-M?

Sitting facing the Esquire Girl Calendar each morning at the breakfast table, I grew up believing that these pin-up gals were just as wholesome as "a good breakfast to start off the day."

All through December, a lady Santa Claus smiled at me from that calendar. Her pink and white incredibly proportioned body was scantily clothed in red "Santa" attire. She was wearing an expression more than anything, that of a high school cheerleader . . . innocent, but just a little naughty.

For those cable operators that remember the Esquire Calendar girls or have the equivalent pin-up girl poster hanging on their bathroom door at work . . . what do you expect from your R-rated, adult-oriented programming service?

"Naughty" has come a long way. Sex is now served on television and often is accompanied by generous helpings of unprecedented violence, which is glibly titled "S-M" and seemingly totally acceptable to one and all. S-M stands for sado masochism. Sado masochism is: "abnormal delight in cruelty; a sexual perversion in which gratification is got by torturing the loved person." Sado masochism is liberally represented in much of the R-rated fare, even though it would seem by the above definition that the appeal of S-M would have a very limited audience.

For those viewers who enjoy scenes where a man throws his lover into the bathtub and stomps on her face with his motorcycle boots . . . these "S-M" films are right up their alley. For those who do not hang out in alleys for their entertainment or thrills, these scenes can be repulsive.

What's wrong with plain old wholesome sex?

Now that the marketplace has expanded, perhaps there will be incentive for quality sex movies to be produced by people who did not have poor toilet training when they were young, or do not hate their mothers, or suffer from various and sundry other emotional problems that inspire the lesser movie makers to have an actor kick the leading lady's face in . . . in the bathtub.

With more programming services in the market for sex movies there will either be more third-rate stuff cranked out or more competition generated. Here's hoping that creative talents will take the lead and provide the industry with acceptable programming for the adult viewer who just enjoys sex and has no psychological hang ups.

How It Works From the Operator's View

The system is installed in the headend with the keyboard at the headend or a master edit system at the office as required. Note: especially from the operator's view, "system is installed in the headend." That's it—nothing additional in the home and still a complete unattended public access system would surely impress the city fathers.

System operators select which categories will be most beneficial and how much information will be presented in each category for their specific community. Once the categories are identified and numbers from one to 99 assigned, a category code sheet can be made up and sent out to subscribers with the next billing. The code sheet is presumably maintained alongside the subscriber's telephone for easily accessing data as it is required.

Taking the information of each category, the operator then enters it into pages in the bubble memory. The magnetic bubble memory used in this system provides 412 pages of eight lines, with 32 characters per line. Each page can be assigned a specific time for it to show and any of the display enhancements such as character size or background color can be entered as a part of the data for each page.

This amount of memory would allow approximately four pages of information per category for a total of 99 categories. If more categories or more memory is required, it can be developed on an optional basis. Memory is not specifically assigned to categories; i.e.: Category No. 14 may have 12 pages and Category 20 only one page. As necessity demands, Category No. 14 could be changed to two pages and Category 20 to 20 pages from the system keyboard.

As an example, some of the headers of categories may be: school lunch information, sporting events and their time place, special video information for the deaf, road conditions, airline schedules, entertainment, senior citizens services, high school information, etc. If a sponsor would be interested in presenting the information for a specific category, the opportunity to sell advertising becomes apparent.

The system may be accessed and the data of any category updated at any time from the keyboard. This allows last minute changes to be made to school schedules, and to post hazardous or problem road conditions or, notify subscribers of imminent weather conditions, all of which can be done and displayed in a very timely manner. For specific emergency type information, the operator may want to back this channel with an audio message.

One very interesting and extremely important form of feedback which can be obtained from this system is the number of times that a specific category has been requested. For example, at the end of the week the system is able to report the total number of times a category has been shown. This will allow you to increase the data in areas of specific interest to the community and by using this history over a period of time, categories can be added or deleted as required.

How It Works From the Advertisers View

This system enables an advertiser to insert a page or more of advertising into a category with which he is specifically associated. Each time the category is requested, the advertiser's message is shown to someone who has an interest in that information. After some period of time, with the request summation feature, the advertiser will know exactly the number of times his message has been viewed.

How It Works With the Big Picture

Without the cost or effort of installing systems components in the individual subscriber's homes, the CPA system provides a real form of public access. Development and sale of this system is not intended to belittle the importance of Two-way or Teletext, whose systems will provide a very necessary logical step in the field of data communications as they become more widely accepted and used. However, the CPA system provides a method for the large cable system to provide this form of access today and plan for its replacement with Teletext as it becomes available. Also applicable to the small cable systems, where it again can provide a very vital link between today's requirement and tomorrow's planning, the CPA system could provide the public access form for that cable system for years to come.

Because the system is centrally located and easily installed, the system's maintenace is greatly reduced and actual operating hours per subscriber is greatly enhanced. Unlike the Teletext which would allow subscribers to pull individual pages, the CPA system presents its information to all subscribers at one time. This has a bad and a good side, both of which must be evaluated. The negative at this point is that your subscriber may have to wait a little longer to see his information, while on the plus side, the information is generally local information which has always maintained a high level of acceptance. Another plus is that the picture quality (with character sizes, enhancement and background color) is maintained to a higher degree than is possible with set top converters. If the access time of the system becomes a major consideration, at least in cable, additional channels may be allocated to additional CPA systems as the demand dictates.

Cost is minimized because it does not require equipment to be located at the subscriber's home.

It Works With MDS, Broadcast and LPTV

The system as described is also very applicable to MDS systems who could provide this form of public access to their subscribers during off hours. Broadcasters and LPTV could also use this system as an additional off-hour service.

Working . . . Today

One of the most beautiful parts of the CPA system is its availability today. There are no requirements for FCC rulings or major system overhaul to allow for incorporation of the CPA system. There is no requirement for a larger national data base because of the local type of information which can be presented on the CPA. Future programs and plans for the CPA system will incorporate some form of access to the larger data bases; however, the system is complete and very functional today without that form of data. The system is applicable to filling many of the demands being dictated by city fathers for public access today. Installing the CPA system today can be addressed as a final installation or as an interim step to full Two-way and Teletext in the future.
